Abstract

The abstract summarize the whole report in approximately 200-400 words. All parts of the report should be represented in some way, with focus on the introduction and conclusions. The keyword is summary.

Introduction

The introduction of the report should give a background to the project, to put it in a context. Where is the project going to be used? In what environment? Under what circumstances? Further, the introduction should give a clear picture of what you are going to do and what problems you are going to solve. If possible, outline what practical problem this project will solve in the two first sentences of the introduction. The project specification should be a good starting point. The keyword is overview.

Analysis

The analysis should specify the sub problems and analyze them separately. Each analyze results in a number of different possible approaches. Make specifications of different aspects of the different approaches. The keyword is specification.

Implementation

The implementation should compare different approaches, based in the analysis in previous chapter; show which approach you did select and argue why. The keyword is selection.

Solutions

The solutions should explain your actual solutions for each of the selected implementations. This part could be compared to a traditional tutorial and it is important that you explain in such detail that someone with just basic skills in using a Linux system could replicate your work. You should explain what you did, how you did it and why you did it (if applicable). Also add information about things that did not go as planned so the reader can avoid the errors you encountered. Your diary or log-notebook will be good base for this chapter. The keyword is instruction.

Conclusion

The conclusion summarize the report once more, but now from a salespersons point of view. Try to focus on the good things of your work. If you want to lift some of the not so good things, try to do so in a positive voice. You could also point out if there are some extensions that was not part of the project, but that you would find useful to add if you were to continue the project. The keyword is salespitch.
